"It's not so much where I'm playing but that I am playing," said pianist-guitarist Beth Nielson of her music.

Miss Nielson will be among the musicians performing at the Seminar '74 Down Funky Street Coffee House held this week. She will play the piano and sing some of her own compositions.

"This will be the first time for me to play the piano in public," admits Miss Nielson who has only been playing the instrument for a few months. Her main musical instrument is the guitar, which she played in last year's Coffee House production.

A recent graduate of Jefferson

Davis High School, Miss Nielson is currently an instructor at Greengate School. She teaches art, music, "or whatever comes to mind" to five-to-ten-year-olds during their "free" period.

Her plans for the future include going to college, possibly Huntingdon, to study drama or elementary education. She says she doesn't plan to study music because she doesn't want to teach it.

She's not ruling out music playing a big part in her career, however.

As a part of a four member band, Home At Last, Miss Nielson has worked to expand her scope in the musical world. The folk rock band is currently recording some of their own compositions at a studio in Birmingham
